4 Kirtland's Warbler: Why So Rare? Harold F. Mayfield

Only two hundred pairs of this songbird remain and finding a mate in the jack pine forests of northern Michigan becomes a little more difficult each spring.

p. 9

9 The Crow's Nest Bookshop

10 Too Happy in Thine Happiness Samuel A. Eliot

When a bird sings it may do more than assert its territoriality. It may inspire a poet to pour out a full heart in profuse strains of premeditated art.

p. 10

14 From Hostility to Amity Louise de Kiriline Lawrence and Aleta Karstad

Glimpses into the courtship of a downy woodpecker pair illustrate how ritualized behavior helps to forge a bond of cooperation between two wild creatures.

18 Will the Real Noxious Model Please Stand Up? Susan M. Smith

The experienced bird has learned to avoid the noxious snake sliding through the brush. But no, the snake is actually a harmless look-alike duping the bird out of a perfectly good meal. What humbug is afoot here?

p. 18

24 Research & Review Richard E. Bonney, Jr.

26 News & Notes

27 I Say with My Brush Martin Sales

The color and magic of bird artist Wilhelm Goebel.
